SUCCESSFUL FARMER TELLS STORY OF PROCEDURE

"I firmly believe that the application of adequate amounts of fertilizer and lime is the cheapest labor that I have on my farm," says Hardy C. Barnes. Barnes is a young Lunenburg county farmer operating a 280-acre farm near Kenbridge, Virginia.

He produces flue-cured tobacco, cotton, corn, soybeans, and small grain. In addition, he has 23 grade Black Angus brood cows, raises some market hogs and a good pork supply for the family, and applies good forestry management in his woodlands.

He also practices crop rotation and fertilizes and limes according to the results of soil tests, according to H. B. Powers, Lunenburg county agent.

His allotment of 9.3 acres of flue-cured tobacco is the major cash crop. He usually applies 1,200 pounds of a 3-9-9 fertilizer in the row and side-dresses three weeks later with 75 to 100 pounds of an 8-0-24 fertilizer per acre.

When necessary, he irrigates, and the yield over a four-year period has been about 2,200 pounds per acre. Barnes says, "I follow all the practices that are recommended because I know that flue-cured tobacco is very exacting in its requirements." His 22 acres of corn is grown in a three-year rotation with small grain and lespedeza for hay. "On the corn I use 600 pounds of a 5-10-10 fertilizer and sidedress with 70 pounds of nitrogen. I plant an adapter, recommended variety at the rate of about 14,000 stalks per acre," says Barnes. His yield has been approximately 75 bushels per acre.

The 40 acres of ladino clover and tall grass pasture are grazed rotationally and fertilized every other year at the rate of 500 pounds of 2-12-12 or 5-10-10 fertilizer and limed as needs require.

According to County Agent Powers, Barnes believes in adequate farm planning and is keeping very good records, and he plans more detailed records so that he can determine more accurately the costs and profits on each of his enterprises.

He follows research and is always willing to make adjustments when research points the way to more profits.

Memorial Church 61 Years Old

The following article was recently handed us, same being a clipping from this newspaper pertaining to the history of The Memorial Methodist Church in Appomattox. We republish same by request:

The Memorial Methodist Church had its beginning in a small group composed of three families of Methodists and several families of Presbyterians, that first met as a Sunday School in the Court House in the year 1897.

The church was really organized in 1898, and the first money towards the purchase of a lot and erection of a building was raised by Mrs. A. H. Clement and Miss Lizzie Irby. The present lot was purchaser in December, 1898, and the building project got under way early in 1899, the present church being dedicated on the fourth Sunday in September of that year.

The lot was purchased on Sept. 17, 1898, from the Trustees of Liberty Baptist Church and Major George A. Armes, and the building was erected by the late C. W. Hancock, under the leadership of the Rev. P. M. Bell, who was pastor of the congregation and lived at the old court house parsonage. Dr. Paul Whitehead was presiding Elder of the Lynchburg District at the time, and presided over Appomattox circuit, of which this church was a part.

The dedicatory sermon was preached by the late Dr. J. Wiley Bledsoe, and the church was named by Mrs. A. H. Clements, as a memorial to her father, Dr. Adam Bledsoe, who was a prominent member of the Virginia Conference.

Trust In God

Lesson for October 16, 1960

CHRISTIAN religion looks different from the inside. What an outsider thinks is nonsense is seen to be solid as the highest wisdom. This is particularly true of trust in God. The non-Christian labels this superstition, while the Christian knows very well that there is no solid ground for trusting in God. God be trusted, but He is not to be tested. Such God-defying conduct is classed as sin. But the Christian knows that there is a vast difference between God and a rabbit's foot. To trust in God is to trust in the Maker of heaven and earth. To trust in the other only a thing, a mere thing at that. It is high time that we learn to trust in God; to trust Him as such as a rabbit's foot is not only silly, it is sinful.

What is God?

The Bible Psalm suggests some reasons for trusting in the one living God. Trust unworthy of trust by itself, trust without reason or anything to trust in is meaningless and may be dangerous. It isn't the trust that is the important thing. GOD is the reason for trusting God. He is the one who made heaven and earth. We have a reason to believe this earth, this life, this world, because we are confident that God made it so. God made this world for improvement, not for destruction. (To be sure, it will be destroyed in time; but it is a sin to destroy it.) God made heaven and earth. He knows what stresses and strains they can stand, and he has designed them to what they were to bear. He created man, and He knows what man can stand.

Solomon suggests a title for God when he used: "Keeper of life." God is always first for life, for health and for success; up-building and not down-dragging. Life creates, he preserves.

Can we trust in God?

The man who wrote Psalm 91 trusted God specially as a protection from the dangers of danger. He mentions particular dangers of his own time, dangers familiar they are to us today. He comforts after! Pestilence is a great killers like T.B. and cancer. War (the arrow that flies by day) and terror in the night—what we call the paper does not have its terrors for those who never expected to die, or who died suddenly, before they knew it.

As the writer reads these words, the thought comes to him of the present day may be uneasy. Did the poet of Psalm 91 promise too much? If we take this Psalm literally, no doubt we can trust the Lord is going to be with us. This, we feel, is saying too much. People who trust the Lord are hurt.

Presumption Presumption

It is important to remember that one of the temptations of Jesus was Psalm 91. Strangely enough, Satan quotes the Bible. Satan, you may be sure, is no good for Jesus. But he knows if he were a preacher he would stick to the text: Believe in God. Satan urges Jesus to jump from the high towers of the temple. Go on, jump, he says. Don't you read your Bible? It says that the devil quotes the Psalm correctly. On their hands the angels will bear you up, lest you strike your foot against a stone."

Satan knew better. Satan wanted Jesus to do what he did, nor what Jesus wanted Jesus to think that he did, nor what he did, nor what he meant, he simply could not believe that because God would be sure to protect him. But Jesus was sure he knew God too well, to quote such words as if they were the words and the only words of God. Jesus knew that to do it is "tempting God." It is a dangerous situation to be in and expect God to keep you as much as stubbing our toe. Further, Jesus knew that God's perfect service of devotion to him, will not mean freedom from danger, or defeat. Jesus himself was to die a violent death. Yet he had a very great deal of good cheer . . . Believe also in me . . . I have overcome the world."
